What would happen if...? In SCHICK MACHINE, maverick composer Paul Dresher built a sonic playground for virtuoso percussionist Steven Schick in which every object and surface is "alive." This extraordinary venture, created in collaboration with writer/director Rinde Eckert and mechanical sound artist Matt Heckert, pushes the limits of contemporary performance as Schick — among the world's foremost contemporary percussionists and the new Artistic Director of the San Francisco Contemporary Music Players — plays large, invented instruments, noise-making sculptures and one-of-a-kind instruments. After the show the audience is invited onstage to play the instruments themselves, making this an ideal outing for music fans and families.
